MAKEMUSIC, INC. ANNOUNCES NATIONAL SYMPOSIUM ON MUSIC ASSESSMENT

Music education thought leaders to present and compare best practices in music assessment

Minneapolis – April 30, 2012 – MakeMusic, Inc. (NASDAQ: MMUS), creators of SmartMusic interactive music learning software for band, orchestra and voice, announced today they will partner with the National Association for Music Education (NAfME) to co-sponsor a National Symposium on Music Assessment as part of NAfME’s Music Education Week.

“Measuring what students have learned is not only essential to improve learning,” said Scott C. Shuler, NAfME president, “it has become increasingly important in advocating for quality arts programs and—in increasingly—in teacher evaluation as well.”

Symposium attendees will include key researchers and music education leaders from across the country. Representatives from states doing exemplary work will present their ideas, and participants will have opportunities to share information to cultivate their understanding of best practices. In addition to furthering the discussion of music standards, participants will also influence the development of future SmartMusic technology that will support music programs across the United States.

“SmartMusic has always provided educators the ability to document proof of student achievement, assign practice reports, track time on-task, create and share assignments and provide online assignment libraries,” said Karen van Lith, MakeMusic CEO. “We are committed to working closely with music educators to support the assessment of statewide and district standards.”

The symposium will take place at the Baltimore Marriott/Convention Center on Sunday, June 24 and Monday, June 25 following the NAFME Music Program Leaders Academy.
